In 2020, the south made up 52% of new HIV diagnoses in the U.S.

Social Determinants of Health such as poverty, education, lack of insurance, and unemployment can negatively impact HIV-related health outcomes for people living in the South, especially among sexual and/or racial/ethnic minorities.